A Saturday morning volunteer event in Fulshear is set to combine roadside cleanup with gardening and electronic recycling. Keep Fulshear Beautiful's community cleanup is scheduled for Nov. 7, with volunteers asked to meet at 9 a.m. at the Irene Stern Community Center, 6920 Katy-Fulshear Road.

The event announcement lists several kinds of work: picking up roadside litter, working on a pollinator garden, planting wildflowers along Charger Way and taking part in drive-through electronic recycling. Volunteers will receive supplies and assignments before heading to work sites, according to the announcement.

The range of activities offers different ways to contribute to a shared neighborhood effort. Litter pickup addresses waste along roadsides, while garden work and wildflower planting add habitat-focused tasks. The recycling option provides another possible reason to stop by, though the announcement does not say which electronics will be accepted, whether fees apply or how long recycling service will operate.

People considering bringing equipment should check with organizers first for current acceptance rules, costs and service hours. The event details are also subject to change, so confirm the schedule before setting out. The announcement welcomes individuals and organized groups, including businesses looking for a team volunteer activity.

For anyone planning to attend, the listed meeting place is the Irene Stern Community Center, not a work site; volunteers are to receive assignments before going out to work. That distinction may help people plan their arrival without guessing where a particular cleanup or planting task will happen.

The event is separate from the Forever Fulshear Farmers' Market. The market's website also lists the Nov. 7 cleanup and meeting time, but the available information does not say that market vendors will take part. The market describes its vendor network as more than 90 vendors whose goods are produced within 200 miles of Fulshear; that is background about the market, not a list of cleanup participants.

The schedule and activity details are based on a local event announcement published by My Neighborhood News and the market's current website, accessed Nov. 2, 2026.
